Dworkin, J., & Savage, M. (2006). Seminar for Parents: Student Finances [Online]. Available via WebVista. [released September 2006, 100 parents of students at the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities registered]

Building on our combined vision to reduce student participation in dangerous behaviors and to assist students in making responsible and healthy decisions, the focus of this course is on educating and supporting students and their families during the college adjustment process. This course includes research based information for parents to read, statistics, a threaded discussion where parents can anonymously respond to questions and read how other parents have handled similar situations, and quotes from parents and students that parents can read and listen to. There are five objectives for parent participants: (1) To develop a realistic understanding of normative college student development; (2) To develop skills for talking with their college student about challenging issues; (3) To develop skills for guiding their student and not ruling their student; and (4) To develop skills for accessing resources for him or her self, their family, and their student. (5) To develop skills necessary to respond to a crisis.

Dworkin, J. (2001). Teen-link: Your guide to resources on teen issues [Online]. Available: <http://www.teenlink.umn.edu> (4,485 average monthly visits)
Teen-Link is a searchable database of resources on teen issues. It was developed as a means for educators, parents, teachers, youth and professionals working with adolescents to obtain quick access to books, journal articles and web sites addressing teen issues. The resources included in this database have been reviewed, and abstracts are included with most of the materials.

Dworkin, J., & Gengler, C. (2012-2013; 2014-2015). Using the Internet for Parent Education – Research Update for Professionals [Online]. Delivered via Moodle.

(155 participants)

This short term professional development opportunity is designed to help professionals: Consider the ways parents use the Internet; Discover the differences in Internet use by age, gender, socio-economic status, and other demographic variables; Investigate current research on how professionals have incorporated technology into parent education; Analyze current best practices in reaching parents using technology; Be challenged to enhance their ability to effectively use technology to reach families. Throughout this course, professionals will have opportunities to apply current research on parents and technology through online activities and threaded discussions.

+Dworkin, J., & Gengler, C. (2010-2011). Understanding adolescent risk-taking behavior: Research update for professionals [Online]. Delivered via WebVista. (224 participants from 26 states – offered three times)

This course includes audio-streamed Power Point presentations (using Breeze technology), summaries of research articles, interactive quizzes, and a range of other resources. Participants are encouraged to dialogue with other professionals and thoughtfully consider the implications of this research for their work through threaded discussion questions. This online course is designed to: Define risk-taking; Present a multi-dimensional framework for understanding risk-taking; Introduce a model of adolescent decision making; Reframe risk-taking and offer a systems approach to risk-taking with an emphasis on family influences.

+Dworkin, J., Gengler, C., & Olson, K. (2006-2007). What's new with teens and their families? Research update for professionals [Online]. Delivered via WebVista. (315 participants from 32 states)

This is an online research update for professionals who work with youth and families, developed based on face-to-face workshops offered throughout Minnesota. This course includes audio-streamed Power Point presentations (using Breeze technology), summaries of research articles, interactive quizzes, and a range of other resources. Participants are encouraged to dialogue with other professionals and thoughtfully consider the implications of this research for their work through threaded discussion questions. There are three objectives for participants: (1) To examine current research in normative adolescent and family development; (2) To review family systems theory; and (3) To consider current research and trends in parent and family education, emphasizing the bi-directionality of the parent-child relationship.

*Dworkin, J., & Haberman, H. (2003). Tips for families [Online]. No longer available.

Tips for Families was a database of expert information provided by NCFR members. The focus of the information was to provide parents with usable information based on current research that fits within the 10 CFLE substance areas. As co-directors/editors, we worked to redesign the site and set up a process for peer review. NCFR has moved to a new online system, which I participated in the development of (PRL).

Faculty Development Activities

- 2018-19 Provost's Department Chairs and Heads Leadership Program
- 2016 CEHD Leads: Leadership Development Program, College of Education and Human Development, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
The University identified key challenges that University leaders must be positioned to address. Leadership and Talent Development, within the Office of Human Resources, developed an integrated leadership development strategy to support leaders facing these challenges. CEHD Leads is based on the corresponding competencies that enable academic leaders to successfully address these key challenges. CEHD Leads is designed to assist faculty in developing leadership skills, capacity and readiness so they are positioned to take on larger leadership roles and effectively address department challenges.
- 2013 Treks: Mobile, for those interested in using mobile technology for teaching and learning, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
- 2012 Treks: Mobile, for those interested in using mobile technology for teaching and learning, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
Treks is an innovative professional development program designed to support instructors' exploration and integration of instructional technologies. The program provides designated time for instructors to explore the ever-expanding array of learning technologies and tools available at the University of Minnesota as well as best practices for using them to enhance student learning and engagement.
- 2005-2006 Early Career Teaching Program, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
The Early Career Teaching Program is designed to assist faculty members early in their careers to develop and enhance their teaching skills and establish a foundation for a lifetime of creative and engaging teaching. It provides a variety of opportunities to increase knowledge and skills to enhance teaching, including working with master teachers who will model and teach about a variety of effective pedagogical styles and methods.

- Spring 2005 WebCT Vista: Creating Basic Course Web Sites, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
This 3.5-hour course is for University of Minnesota faculty and course designers who would like to learn about using WebCT Vista for creating course web sites. Participants learn how to build a basic site containing a syllabus, content pages, links to other web sites, discussion topics, and announcements.
- Spring 2005 HTML Basics, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
This 3.5-hour course covers the basics of HTML (Hypertext Markup Language), the underlying code for web pages.
- Spring 2004 Mentor in Next Generation of the Extension Professorate Program, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
A workshop designed to support Extension faculty in the use of technology-enhanced learning. For participating, I received $250.
- Spring 2003 Participant in Next Generation of the Professorate Program, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
I was nominated by the Dean of CHE to participate in this two-day workshop designed to support new faculty in the use of technology-enhanced learning. Participation included receiving Technology Enhanced Learning start-up funds of $1000.
- Fall 2002 Getting Started as a Successful Grant-Writer and Academician, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
This day and a half seminar covered the fundamental principles of grant writing, tips on how to write for reviewers, organizational structures of the major federal funding agencies, available funding for beginning researchers, and how to organize multidisciplinary, group-based research programs. The Office of the Executive Vice President and Provost sponsored this seminar.
- Fall 2000 Participant in Agriculture, Consumer, and Environmental Sciences Teaching College Course, University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign
A 10-week development program that includes information on planning, implementing, and managing effective in-class and out-of-class instruction, developing and using instructional materials, applying research-based techniques of effective instruction, planning and implementing evaluations of learning and instruction, interacting effectively with students, developing a teaching portfolio and becoming involved in peer observation of teaching.
